T is to the "humble homes" of Canada that the great majority of Life Insurance payments find their way.

Many such homes today would lack the siries of life-were it not for the "little savings" which thrifty parents have set aside periodically in Life Insurance.

To the family which loses its breadwinner, Life Insurance means money to buy food and clothing — money to pay the rent — money to pay household bills — money to educate the children. Life Insurance also means, in many cases, independence of private charity or public relief.

In your own community, as well as in hun-Inyour own community, as well as in hun-dreds of cities and towns across Canada, "little savings" in Life Insurance are doing "big jobs". During the past six years, policyholders and beneficiaries in Canada have received, daily, from their Life Insu-rance Savings, half a million dollars.

Cinderella Resources

The hunt for the hidden wealth which lies at varying depths beneath the soil and rocks of the prairie provinces in the form of gold and silver, petroleum and nickel, copper and zine in unknown quantities and values is firing the imagination of the people and their respective governments in the west.

There is an allure, a glamour, in the thought that there may be gold "in them thar hills"; in the possibility that beneath the feet of those who tread the soil there may lie great pools of liquid wealth awaiting the drill og sush into a torrent of dollars; in the prospect that a chip of the hamiler may unearth a heavy vein of rich silver or reveal the presence of the peacock iridescence of a great deposit of copper.

Moreover, the search for dormant riches of this kind awatens within the human breast the sporting proclivities, the gambling spirit which is incherent ing greater or less degree in almost every normal person, though it may not always be recognized or admitted as such. There is disappointment boday, but tomorrow the searcher will be rewarded. El Dorado may be hidden, but it is at hand.

It is this firm conviction which enables the prospector to carry on his hidden, but it is at hand.

It is this firm conviction which enables the prospector to carry on his arduous task, through weary years crowded with disappointments and small returns, to exist in poverty and sometimes on the borderland of hunger in lonely wildernesses, to endure the hardships of severe elimatic conditions without consoling amenities and sometimes to die without realizing the great dream which haunts his daylight hours and accompanies his simubers.

And in the cities and towns are men in stores and offices, and in the country farmers walking behind the plow who are dreaming the same dreams, the hope of wrestling wealth from the depths, if not by themselves directly, through the agency of those in the front line trenches. They are willing to risk their money, and sometimes more than they can afford, to finance the active searchers or to buy stock in concerns engaged in that pursuit.

Like the lonely prospector in the field, they, too, are often doomed to disappointment. A few may win great rewards, some may reap reasonable returns, but the odds are against them, for Nature is cunning and capricious. She hides her stores of treasures in unexpected places and guards them with unforescen obstacles. It is this very capriciousness which gives the hunt its great allure and gives birth to the hope which urges the hunter ever onward.

Yet, knowing full well the handleaps against them, people are ever willing to take a chance in the hope of striking something big which will amply recompense them for expenditure of much coin and great energy. It is as well that it is so. For if it were not for this gambling spirit much of the world's treasures now being converted to the use of mankind would never have been discovered.

On the other hand, however, the romance which attaches to the reports of almost daily discoveries of deposits of ore is apt to overshadow other and more stable though less risky potentialities, of which there are evidences on every hand.

Analaytical chemists and engineers, who are familiar with, and have done a considerable amount of experimentation work with many of these non-metallic resources, are responsible for the statement that if the same amount of energy and money as has been invested in the hunt for the more spectacular metals, had been devoted to the development of these known resources, many flourishing industries might have been started and be well on the way to reaping profitable rewards for their sponsors.

It is admitted that under existing economic conditions it may be difficult to enlist local capital in such enterprises, but in the Old Land capital is afailable for undertakings of this kind, provided the opportunities are made known.

French Rightlists resurrected the puzzle of the missing document, linking it with the arrest of Suzame Linder, Foreign Office employee charged with foreign documents.

One newspaper asserted Mme, Linder's arrest brought the disappearance to light but government officials said the historic note had been sought since it was found to be missing from the files in 1928.

Just what became of it after Baron von Schoen, German ambassador to Paris, handed it to Premier Rene Viviani on August 3, 1914, is not known. Presumably it was filed but a committee formed in 1928 to edit documents concerning the origins of the Great War was unable to find it.

The late Raymond Poincare quoted it in his memoirs. It is believed he worked from the original.
